

Includes All Wedge Shots 90 Yards And In: Perfecting Your Short Game

There are three main types of wedge shots: chips, pitches, and bunker shots.

- Chips are low, running shots that are played from just off the green. Chips are typically used to get the ball close to the hole or to get it out of a hazard.
- Pitches are higher, lofted shots that are played from a variety of distances. Pitches are typically used to get the ball onto the green or to stop it quickly on a downhill slope.
- Bunker shots are shots that are played from a bunker, which is a sandy area that is often located around the greens. Bunker shots are typically played with a sand wedge, which has a wide, angled face that is designed to help the ball get out of the sand.

The type of wedge you choose will depend on the shot you are trying to play.

- For chips, you will want to use a wedge with a low loft, such as a pitching wedge or a 9-iron.
- For pitches, you will want to use a wedge with a higher loft, such as a gap wedge or a sand wedge.
- For bunker shots, you will want to use a sand wedge.

Once you have chosen the right wedge, you need to set up properly for the shot.

- Your feet should be shoulder-width apart, and your weight should be evenly distributed.
- Your hands should be positioned on the club so that your thumbs are pointing down the shaft.
- Your grip should be firm, but not too tight.
- Your stance should be open, with your feet wider than your shoulders.

When you are ready to swing, take a deep breath and focus on hitting the ball solidly. Your swing should be smooth and fluid, with no jerking or stopping. Your follow-through should be just as smooth as your backswing.

The best way to improve your wedge shots is to practice regularly. The more you practice, the more comfortable you will become with your swing and the more accurate you will become.

Here are a few tips for practicing wedge shots:

- Start by practicing chips from a short distance away from the green.
- Once you have mastered chips, start practicing pitches from a variety of distances.
- Finally, start practicing bunker shots from a variety of lies in the sand.

With regular practice, you will be able to hit wedge shots with confidence and accuracy. And this will help you to improve your short game and shoot lower scores.

Wedge shots are an essential part of the short game. By following the tips in this article, you can learn to hit wedge shots with confidence and accuracy. And this will help you to improve your short game and shoot lower scores.
