Time is a curious thing. It can feel like it's slipping through our fingers one moment and standing still the next. It can be a source of both joy and sorrow, as we celebrate the passage of time with loved ones and mourn the loss of those we've cherished.

Memory is equally complex. It can be a source of comfort and inspiration, as we recall happy moments from our past. But it can also be a source of pain, as we remember difficult experiences that we'd rather forget.

What if we could experience time and memory in a different way? What if we could step outside of our linear understanding of time and see the past, present, and future all at once? What if we could explore our memories in a way that allowed us to see them from a new perspective?

These are the questions that Sideways Look At Time, an immersive theatrical performance, explores.

Sideways Look At Time is a unique and innovative performance that uses a variety of theatrical techniques to create an immersive experience for audiences. The performance takes place in a custom-built environment that is designed to disorient and challenge the audience's sense of time and space. The audience is led through a series of vignettes that explore different aspects of time and memory. These vignettes are presented in a nonlinear fashion, and the audience is free to move through the space at their own pace.

The performances are designed to be highly sensory, and the audience is encouraged to use all of their senses to experience the performance. The use of sound, light, and touch creates a rich and immersive environment that allows the audience to fully engage with the performance.

Sideways Look At Time is a thought-provoking and emotionally resonant performance that challenges audiences to think about the nature of time and memory. The performance is a unique and immersive experience that will stay with audiences long after they leave the theatre.
