Bryant's success on the court translated into a lucrative career off the court. He signed endorsement deals with major companies like Nike, Adidas, and Sprite. He also starred in several movies and television shows. Bryant's net worth was estimated to be $600 million at the time of his death.

Bryant's fame and fortune gave him a celebrity lifestyle. He was often seen at Hollywood parties and events, and he was friends with many other celebrities. Bryant was also known for his lavish spending habits. He owned several luxury cars and homes, and he often traveled by private jet.

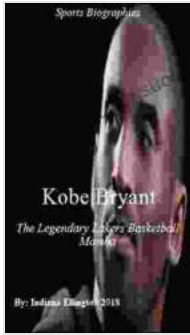

But behind the glitz and glamour, Bryant was a complex and troubled man. He struggled with depression and anxiety, and he was often at odds with his teammates and coaches. Bryant also had a difficult relationship with his father, Joe Bryant. Joe was a former NBA player who was known for his tough love approach to parenting. Bryant often felt like he was not good enough for his father, and he struggled to live up to his expectations.

Bryant's struggles with mental health came to a head in 2003, when he was accused of sexual assault. Bryant admitted to having an affair with the woman who accused him, but he denied the assault charges. The case was eventually dropped, but it left a lasting scar on Bryant's reputation.

Despite his struggles, Bryant continued to play basketball at a high level. He won two more NBA championships in 2009 and 2010, and he was named the NBA MVP in 2008. Bryant retired from the NBA in 2016, and he was inducted into the Naismith Memorial Basketball Hall of Fame in 2020.

Bryant's death in a helicopter crash on January 26, 2020 was a tragic loss for the basketball world. He was 41 years old, and he was just starting to enjoy his retirement. Bryant's death is a reminder that even the most successful people can struggle with mental health issues. It is important to seek help if you are struggling, and to know that you are not alone.
